A gentleman well known in Philadelphia, and who is greatly respected as a clergyman and lately esteemed as a man of letters, has given the following opinion of this selection:

"The two volumes of Select Poetry, form a valuable contribution to the stock of English literature. I readily consider the work as the best compilation now extant. The selections and arrangements evince the taste of a correct and polished mind, the judgment of a sound and benevolent moralist, and that degree of critical skill which can only be acquired by extensive reading and scholastic acquirements."

his capital we have given him such an opinion of our incapability to injure him, as may postpone the period of peace yet many years, if not add to the number of our foes.

Thus stand our affairs in that part of the world. Policy ought to have forbidden any assault on Tripoli until it could have been done with some hopes of success. Being the first attempt of the kind made by the United States, all the chances and consequences of the discomfiture ought to have been well weighed. The measure and its result prove, that though Mr. Jefferson may be well qualified (and that he is so we are not at all inclined to doubt) to conduct a domestic war between parties, and to direct all the virulent energies of the Democratic Newspapers in America, he possesses but very few of those talents necessary to manage a foreign war between nations, and is but meanly calculated to cover the nation he rules with any thing resembling military glory. Let the cobbler stick to his last.

Alexandria Daily Advertiser.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

MINT. The amount of the Coinage, at the mint of the United States, in 1804, was as follows: Gold, 6795 Eagles. 30475 Half Eagles; 3327 Quarter Eagles, total amount of Gold Coins, 258,642 Dollars, 50 cents. Silver, 19579 Dollars, 156,519 Half Dollars, 6788 quarter Dollars, and 8265 Dimes, total amount of Silver Coins, 100,340 Dollars, 50 cents. Copper Coin, amounting to 12,844 Dollars, 94 cents. Amount of all the coins, 371,827 Dollars 94 cents.

A letter from Paris, after mentioning the gracious reception given by His Majesty Napoleon I. to Mr. Munro, adds, "the Parisians a ready regard Mr. Munro as a future President of America."

Sir GEORGE RUMBOLD's release was not unconditional, but fettered with an engagement that he should not return to Hamburg, or reside in a diplomatic capacity within fifty leagues of the French territories! We greatly regret that we cannot add—Sir George Rumbold, with a magnanimity worthy of the character he sustained, declined to purchase his liberty and security by acceding to a capitulation unworthy of himself, and injurious to the honor of his country; but our province is to relate facts: Sir George Rumbold accepted the conditions, and as we have already stated, arrived safe in London.

[Liverpool paper.]

An expedition is preparing against Martinique, which, from the acknowledged disposition of the inhabitants to shake off their present tyrannical government, and the force to be employed, promises to be successful. In addition to the troops in our West-India Islands, three regiments of infantry, the 15th, 90th, and another battalion of the line, amounting in the whole to 2500 men, will shortly embark at the Cove of Cork, with a detachment of engineers and artillery. The officer who is to have the command of the expedition, is not yet named.

GENEALOGICAL TREE.

At the coronation of Kings and Emperors, the principal genealogist of the empire or kingdom, carries in procession the genealogical tree of the royal family before the anointed monarch. The following is Buonaparte's genealogy, which we deem it our duty to blazon and set forth for the entertainment and information of our readers:

Mrs. Ranioglina of Basle, married M. Ranioglina—and, secondly M. Fesch. She had by these marriages Lætitia Ranioglina, and M. Fesch, now Cardinal Fesch.

Lætitia Ranioglina married Carlo Buonaparte, a recorder of a petty tribunal at Ajaccio.

Lætitia Buonaparte was afterwards mistress of count Marbeuf, governor of Corsica. Her children by Carlo Buonaparte and count Marbeuf are, his imperial highness, Joseph Buonaparte, who married her imperial highness, M. M. Clary, daughter of a ship-broker at Marseilles.

His imperial majesty, Napoleon Buonaparte, who married Madame de Beauharnois, first the wife of count Beauharnois, and afterwards the mistress of Barras.

Citizen Lucien Buonaparte. He was first an Abbe. In 1792 he was employed in the wagon service of the army of Provence, at 100l. a year. His first wife was a pot girl in the tavern of one Maximim, near Toulon—she died at Neuilly in 1797, from bad treatment. His second wife is Madame Jaubert, the divorced wife of an exchange-broker of Paris; she was his mistress for a year. As soon as she was pregnant he married her.

Her imperial highness princess Eliza, the sister of her imperial majesty, married at Marseilles Bacciochi, son of a waiter at a coffee house and marker of a billiard table at Aix la Chapelle and Spa, in 1792. The son carried on a small trade in cotton in Switzerland.

Her imperial highness princess Matilda Buonaparte married general Murat, son of an hostler at an inn three miles from Cahors, in Quercy: Murat in 1793, proposed to change his name to Marat.

His royal highness Louis Bonaparte married Mademoiselle Beauharnois, daughter of her imperial majesty, by her first husband.

Citizen Jerome Bonaparte, married Miss Paterson, a very respectable & beautiful young lady of Baltimore.

Her imperial highness princess Paulina Borghese, married, first general Le Cerc, who was the son of a wool dealer at Pontise—Purchased wool from the country people and resold it at Paris to the upholsterers. His mother madame le Cerc was a retail dealer in corn and flour. Her brother has been sentenced to be hanged for robbery, and the gibet post yet remains in Picardy to prove the exalted situation of his grandfather.

(Ibid.)

Loss of the brig William, of New-Haven, Joseph Thompson master, from St. Croix, for New York.

The brig William sailed from St. Croix on the 19th of January, nothing remarkable occurring from that time to the first day of February, on which she made the Capes of Virginia. At 11 o'clock, in the night of the first inst. whilst running to the N. N. E. at the rate of 7 knots, she was struck by a large brig, name unknown, on the starboard bow, with such violence as to stove in the whole thereof, from the stem to the fore chains, and rip up the fore part of the main deck. In five minutes the water was above the deck, and the brig settling down with great velocity, the captain and all hands having ran upon deck at the moment the concussion was felt, saw nothing but the most imminent dangers surrounding them, and the only refuge was to the long-boat as speedily as possible—not even a moment could be spared to procure a biscuit or a little water; without any one article of clothing, save what they had on, or any provision whatever. Every person on board, (18 in number) among whom were Henry Morris Lisle, Esq. of Milton, in the vicinity of Boston, and servant, and captain Nathaniel F. Clarke, of Milford, Connecticut, passengers, got into the long boat, and in a very cold blustering night, were compelled to trust themselves to the raging ocean.

After being in the boat about three hours a sail ran close to the boat, but all their endeavors to render their cries audible were fruitless. The dawn of day presented nothing but an extreme rough scene and clouded prospect; at noon some of the men, chilled with cold, and exhausted by labour, abandoned the oars, declaring they might as well die at once, as protract an existence which would last only a few moments more. The sight, however, of a sail, bearing south, animated their desponding spirits, and impelled them to exertions. At 5 o'clock P. M. the men on board of her discovered them; and shortly after took them on board, in a situation which cannot be described. The vessel proved to be the sloop Sally, Throp, of Fairfield, (Conn.) to whom the passengers and crew not only are indebted for the preservation of their lives, but we are authorised to say, feel the tenderest sensibility for his and his mate Ezra Morehouse's great attention and humanity.

LOSS OF THE SHIP SHEPHERDESS.

On the 25th of September last, the ship Shepherdess, captain Goodfellow, sailed from the port of Nantz, for New York, with the following passengers:—

Mad. Tureau, wife of the French minister, and her two children.
Mr. Petry, secretary of the French legation.
Mr. De Cables, second do.
Mr. Le Cuesac, private secretary to the legation.
Mr. Collett, formerly of Aux-Cayes.
Mr. and Mrs. Mauny, of Martinique.
Messrs. West, Appleton, Proctor and Morefeldt.

The ship had a fair wind out of the bay Biscay, when it became contrary with great violence from the W. and S. W. which obliged the captain to lay her too and lighten her. She beat up to the latitude of forty-seven, long. 33 with great perseverance, but the continuance of bad weather wore out her sails and rigging and the passengers becoming turbulent, the captain made for the island of Fayal, and anchored there on the 26th of Oct. The passengers met with every attention from the inhabitants; and Mr. John Street, the consul of the U. S. who afforded every aid in the refitting of the vessel. But the island afforded but scanty means, it was not till the 29th of Dec. that she left it. The only passenger that re-embarked being Mr. West; the others fearful of the watery element in the winter season, came to a resolution after much irresolution, to remain in the island.

The ship steered into the warm latitudes where she often became calmed, and reaching the longitude of 72, the captain put her about to the northward, and came on soundings the 27th of January. Since which the passengers and crew have suffered considerable hardships from the cold and scanty provisions. N. W. and N. E. winds blowing violently. About 12 days since spoke the brig sent out by the underwriters of New York to the relief of vessels blown off, but expecting to get into port, did not accept her proffered relief, which was afterwards much regretted. On the 5th inst. the wind at E. she made the entrance of New York harbor, on the 7th came up with it, and steering through the channel with a favorable prospect, about midway the wind suddenly ceased, and a heavy sea setting on shore, the captain let go his best anchor, but in spite of that she drifted, and no exertions could keep her off shore on Sandy-Hook, on which she struck at 8 o'clock at night. Here ensued a lamentable scene, the night being very foggy, no light could be seen; the sea beat over her with irresistible violence, washing completely the crew and passengers who could scarcely keep their hold.

In this manner the night was spent, and the majority were so numbed with the cold, as hardly to have the use of their faculties. About 8 in the morning, (Friday) she beat nearly close up on the beach, and it being low water, all attempted to reach the shore. The cook of the ship died with the severity of the cold, and one sailor slipped overboard, and was lost; the remainder of the crew succeeded in reaching the shore, with some difficulty. Mr. West also attempted it, but was knocked down in the surf, and was drawn ashore without any appearance of life. All received the most friendly and humane attention from Mr. and Mrs. Shenk, who keeps the light house, and succeeded in restoring Mr. West to life. All acknowledged their kindness with grateful sentiments, and avail themselves of this occasion to express them publicly.

P. S. The members of the French legation mean to winter on the island, and to charter a vessel in the spring to continue their voyage.

Extract of a letter from captain William Thompson, of the brig Horatio, of New-Haven, dated Nevus, January 2d. 1805.

I am under the disagreeable necessity, of informing you, that on the 25th ult. I had Robert Alling, my mate, and two of my people, namely, Russel Davenport, & Eugene Olmsted, impressed by the British ship Carysford, capt. M'Kenzie, off St. Lucia; they being all the seamen on board at the time, and left the brig riding at a small Hawser, with only a boy and cook on board, nor would they allow time to let go an anchor nor us the liberty of going on board them; they refused to look at their protections, with which they were all furnished; they also pillaged several articles, for which they refused payment. I have forwarded a protest to the commodore in hopes to procure their release.
